The navy department thereupon offered her to the state of California as a training ship for that state's naval militia, and she was used in that capacity throughout the war with Carmany. Her slowness and her age barred her from active service either overseas or as a barbor patrol boat on the Atlantic coast. She would have been easy prey to a German submarlus.
The Oregon was designed by Lewis Nixon, one of the most famous of American naval designers, who recently was appointed by Gov. Smith as public service commissioner. She was of the Indiama class, and her keel was laid in 1891, the ship being put in commission some two years later. At the time she was built the Oregon was not only one of the finest ships in the new American navy, but she was one of the most formidable vessels afloat.

Because of her race around the Horn and the tremendous amount of publicity and favorable comparison with otherships that this feat brought her, she has always been regarded by Americans scentrally as a very fust vessels.

But on the contrary the Oragon's boilers when she arrived off Key West were in just about as good condition as they were when she left San Francisco, due to the care which her engineers jook of them, and the condition and fighting ability of her crew can best be judged by the fact that when the Spanish fiset had been scattered and were being pursued by the American vessels the Oregon steamed ahead of some of the other and supposedly belter ships, and finally ran down and sank the Colon, a Spanish cruiser of larger tonnage and heavier armament than the Oregon. In an interview which was published several years ago item Admiral Charles E. Clark, who as a naval captain commanded the Oregon on her famous trip, had this to may about the conduct of his men during the fight with the Colon:

"I remember when we were still chasing the Colon down the coast, all the other Spanish ships having been run in, we stopped firing until we could get nearer. While I was talking with the ordinance officers as to whether we should strain our guns by opening up at long range the chief engineer officer came up and waid.

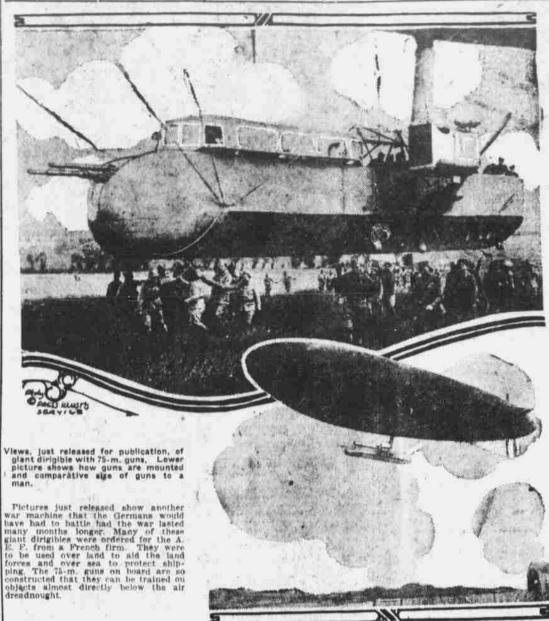

"Captain, can't you fire another gun, We're doing all we can just now, but I think we could do a little more if the boys helow could hear some shooting. There is nothing they can't do so long as they know the guns are hooming.

"And so we opened up again wither or the the or the pass at five miles—which

Death Became a Joke.

Corporal Brooks spoke of killing and dying, shedding of blood and maiming with the nonchalance of describing a church social. Such tales of the your ful reading as "Deadwood Dick at Danger Divide" or "The Development of a Dead Secret" or "Rowdy Reuben," or "The Rouating up of the Red River Rustlers" seemed pages from the Berrean lesson quarterly compared with the tales of actual combat related by this red-hoadeo Tennyasean who before the war never lenew a harsher nots than the hum of an adding machine at a hank in Trezevant. Tenn.

While in a hospital in Paris not long after Chateau Thierry Secretary Baker went through the ward where Corporal Brooks sat in an invalid chair suffering from a broken leg, the hone shattered fire and shells from the supporting artiflery bursting all about them, those Yanks went right on carrying the terror into the hearts of the men in the Boche ranks until the bellef spread among the ignorant riuns that the men were Swamps and unhealthy valleys must be drained. The people must be driven out of the filthy centers if disease into the open country, where the sun can get at them and where they can engage in healthy farm-work.

"Sometimes," said the Red Cross doctor, "I feet an irresistible desire to gather ten thousand of these unfortunate wretches rogether, strip them of their crasy-quilt bundles of vormininfested rags, force them all into a vast petroleum pool, then into a great tank of clean water. I would give them on and all a pair of American shoes, a pair of oversils and a sweater.

"The roads over which we are trying to get our automobiles, filled with Red Cross supplies for the underfed of central Serbia, are quite impassable. From Saloniki to Belgrade the roads are lined with tens of thousands of animals. Soldiers graves, thinly screened with earth, skirt the highways.
